GREEN LAMA

Green Lama was the radio adaptation of pulp magazine hero of the same name. The show had a blend of mystery and drama in all of its 11 episode broadcasted in CBS. It followed the story of Green Lama, who was also known as Jethro Dumont.

After ten years of stay in Tibet, Dumont, together with his Tibetan Tuku sidekick, travelled around the world to spread justice. Unlike other superheroes, Green Lama would be saved from his troubles by intimidating his enemies with his chant, "Ohm, Mani, Padme, Ohm, The Green Lama Strikes for Justice". The role of Green Lama/Jethro Dumont was played by Paul Frees, while Ben Wright took the role of his sidekick. The show had its first episode aired in June 5, 1949 and the last one on August 30, 1949.

Back for the first time in decades, join Jethro Dumont--a.k.a., the green-robed Buddhist superhero known as the Green Lama--as he and his allies attempt to stop a gang war from subsuming New York City. Aided by the Riveter--a new vigilante that emerged as the Green Lama fought Nazis overseas--Dumont will face enemies new and old as criminal forces stalk the Lama from the shadows, manipulating the Big Apple toward a final confrontation that may lead to its utter annihilation!
